

Charleston, SC

Dec. 17, 1811
(aftershock)

New York Spectator
Jan. 04, 1812

Charleston, Dec. 18, 1811

Another Earthquake was felt yesterday at fifteen minutes past 12 o'clock. Its duration did not exceed thirty seconds. The shock was so severe as to be very sensibly felt, generally by those in their houses, while those in the streets were not aware of it. Articles in a hanging position vibrated considerably, and as far as we can learn, their vibrations were from North to South. The shock on Monday morning about 3 o'clock was felt severely at Goose Creek and its neighborhood; fortunately without damage.