

Mitchill, S. L. (1815)
pg. 292

In the county of Christian, (Kentucky) a fine and fresh spring of water was observed to run muddy for several hours. On examining it, after the feculence had settled, he found it to be strongly impregnated with sulphur; so much so that it was spoiled for domestic uses; indeed, it had been converted to one of the strongest brimstone springs he had ever met with.