

Hackensack, NJ

Dec. 16, 1811

Chenango Weekly Advertiser
Feb. 06, 1812

At Hackensack, (N.J.) a severe shock was felt on the morning of the eighteenth. It took place a few minutes after eight o'clock, and continued about thirty seconds. Those who were standing, experienced sensations of dizziness and vertigo. - Several ladies who were sitting, complained that they felt as if sitting on a poise, and were afraid of falling from their seats. In an upper chamber, something suspended from the wall was observed to flap sensibly against it.

Comment

- note wrong date